NOTE: Tannin and resins are chemicals found in all wood species, especially in redwood and cedar. Tannin provides color to the wood and resists dry rot and insects. Alkaline substances, when moisture is present in the air, will draw the tannin out causing black stains on the surface. Examples of alkaline substances are paint, fresh concrete and plaster, baking soda, some chemicals in the air, and out of balance spa water. These stains may be cleaned using oxalic acid, which is found in many wood cleaners.

We have provided every possible solution to eliminate these problems by drying our wood to it's lowest moisture content, and covering it with our multiple coat silicone finish so that you should not experience this difficulty. However, this involves a chemical reaction that is not under our influence or control and is not covered by the warranty.
